Klaus,

Donald Trump is trying to block clean energy projects that could power millions of American homes.

The Trump administration is stalling or shutting down hundreds of wind energy projects across more than 30 states. These projects could produce enough electricity to power roughly 15 million homes, but Trump's agencies are refusing to move them forward — not because the law requires it, but as an extrajudicial attack on clean energy.<sup>1</sup>

This political attack on renewable energy is coming at the exact moment families are being crushed by high electric bills, gas prices, and inflation. Blocking cheap wind power means more dependence on fossil fuels, higher costs for consumers, fewer good jobs, and more climate pollution.

Communities need affordable power, cleaner air, and energy infrastructure that is built for the future — not another giveaway to Trump's Big Oil allies.

Congress must investigate the administration's obstruction of wind projects and pass protections to ensure renewable energy projects are reviewed fairly and without political interference.
